

Editorial

As the saying goes, the only constant is change! Education for Information has enjoyed a considerable measure of continuity in that its two editors have remained in post since the first issue appeared back in 1983. But in other respects it has been subject to the same immutable law of change as the rest of the universe. Both the editors have moved to new institutions during the journal's fourteen years of existence, a North American associated editor has come and gone, the publishing house switched from Elsevier to IOS Press (although remaining in Amsterdam).

Several years ago it was decided to appoint a book reviews editor – division of labour is a common example of change at work. Dick Hartley, who assumed this position is now the latest Education for Information staff member to undergo metamorphosis. I am pleased to announce that Dick will be remaining with us as book reviews editor, but he must now be contacted by prospective reviewers as well as publishers at a new address. As of 1 September 1997 Dick has assumed the post of Head of Department at the Department of Information and Communication, Manchester Metropolitan University in the UK. This is his third teaching post, formerly being Principal Lecturer and then Reader in the Department of Information and Library Management, University of Northumbria at Newcastle (1994–1997), and Lecturer in the Department of Information and Library Studies, University of Wales Aberystwyth (1985–1994). He is also currently chair of BAILER and Treasurer of the UK Online User Group.
